

About The Author

I grew up in eastern Massachusetts in a suburb town near Boston called Belmont. As a nine-year-old I was attending the Episcopal Church and basically taking the Bible at face value even though I wasn't that familiar with what it had to say. (But I was in the habit of believing what I read, whether a narrative or command, which set my spiritual course early on and made for an interesting spiritual journey which is still in progress. I remember I once read (in these early days) a Bible command in the Old Testament not to eat the blood, so not realizing the meat juices from a cooked steak or roast wasn't blood at all, I ceased consuming those juices with a meal. This was the nature of my faith in the Word of God, which hasn't diminished.) Once, when the U.S. Army moved its anti-aircraft battery out of a field on Belmont Hill right near where I lived, a couple of us kids scoured the grounds for what we could find. I found an olive-green can about the size and shape of a Hunts Tomato Paste can. It turned out to be a detonator-canister of fulminate of mercury, used to set off the large sacks of powder that propelled the anti-aircraft shells miles into the sky. I threw it at a large rock about 20 feet away. (I was a good pitcher.) It flew right toward the rock, and then at the last moment it veered away from the rock at an angle, which left us two boys scratching our heads. We then took the canister to our parents, who immediately called the police. A little while later a bomb-squad van pulled up and two guys got out with a bucket of water and tiptoed over to where we had placed the canister. They picked it up and gently placed it in the bucket, took the bucket with the detonator and tiptoed back to the van and slowly drove away. That was my first of a couple very real miracles I have witnessed that saved my life. My angel was working overtime that day.

In the fall of 1968 when I was 22 years old, I went to sea on an old WWII submarine, the U.S.S. Blenny (SS 324), headed for Lisbon, Portugal, then Rota, Spain, and then the Mediterranean Sea for a wonderful three month patrol. I had grown up sailing small sailboats, so I loved it out at sea on a submarine, which spent most of its time on the surface crashing through immense waves (serving on that boat was like being on a peace-time version of that German movie, "The Boat").

After I had gotten off active duty, sometime in the spring of 1970 I became a baptized member of the Worldwide Church of God. Although this small denomination was at that time an Old Covenant biased Sabbatarian Christian church, we were imbued with the Holy Spirit as a group and individually, even though many outside our fellowship didn't think so and labeled us a cult. We were cult-like, but decidedly not a cult. In the most simplistic way possible the apostle Paul defined a Christian as someone who has the indwelling Holy Spirit and is actively led by this Holy Spirit (Romans 8:9,14). So, as some denominations like to call it, I was born-again, or received the Holy Spirit at my baptism, or even before, looking back in time. I had a saving knowledge of God's Word then, even more so now. Worldwide Church of God members knew their Bible from one end to the other, and we were a praying church as well (Mr. Armstrong was always saying a church walks forward on its knees). Herbert Armstrong laid a very good, and very thorough foundation for Sabbath-keeping Churches of God. But that is as far as he went. Foundations need buildings upon them. Be sure to check out the Worldwide Church of God section and articles to see what I mean by that.

From Sabbath to Sunday to Sabbath again

In 1986 Mr. Armstrong died, and Mr. Tkach Sr. took over the church, having been appointed by Mr. Armstrong a year or two before his death to succeed him. Then in the year 1995 this Sabbath-keeping Church of God went through a very painful and interesting experience. As purported to be “a better understanding of the Scriptures” this Sabbath-keeping Church of God with historic roots going back to the 300s AD said that “days of worship were an optional choice for believers.” (To see the doctrinal/historic and somewhat literal connection between the Worldwide Church of God, the early Church, and the Sabbath-keeping Churches of God in the 1600s, see <http://www.unityinchrist.com/history2/earlychurch1.htm> and <http://www.unityinchrist.com/history/historycog1.htm>.) Mr. Tkach Sr. did not live past 1995 and the monumental doctrinal changes he brought the Worldwide Church of God into. As he was dying of cancer he appointed his son, Joe Tkach Jr. as the next hierarchal leader over the Worldwide Church of God. Under Joe Tkach Jr.’s leadership Worldwide essentially ceased to be a Sabbath/Holy Day observing denomination by the year 2001. The whole painful experience that 89,000 Worldwide Church of God members went through is explained in the lead article in the Worldwide Church of God section of this website (see <http://www.unityinchrist.com/wwcofg/wwcofgod.html>.) Be sure to read that article to better understand the spiritual journey I made. Initially, I came through the doctrinal changes Joe Tkach Sr. made, so I now believed that Sunday observing Christians could also possess and be indwelt by the Holy Spirit. (I was soon to learn by direct experience and observation just how true that is, but I’m getting ahead of myself.) Under Joe Tkach Jr., at least at a member-level perspective, and maybe a pastor-level perspective too, Worldwide had become so unstable in its beliefs that I sought spiritual nourishment elsewhere. I had been a member of this fellowship for about 30 years now, but very sadly their headquarters and many of their pastors had lost the ability to give a nourishing sermon, probably due to the fact that doctrinal beliefs within the Worldwide Church of God were changing at times, week by week. I also learned at a mini-conference for New England pastors (I helped run the sound system for that event) that Headquarters and thus the denomination was quietly, but very forcefully from the top down, drifting into Amillennialism and “replacement theology,” which doctrinal eschatological interpretations I viewed and still view as being extremely inaccurate and having strong anti-Semitic bias that has contributed to anti-Semitism in Europe for 1700 years of 'Church history.' Quite naturally, as a hungry sheep, looking for a group that taught accurately from the Word of God, when a tiny Bible study that met on Sundays started up in the town I lived in, I started to attend. They taught a pre-millennial prophetic interpretation on prophecy which I was used to, and they also taught very effectively from an expositional format, teaching verse by verse, chapter by chapter, book by book, through the whole Word of God. I attended their small Sunday Bible study for two and a half years, initially, and witnessed their astounding growth from 12 members to about 125 members. Then within the next four years they mushroomed to around 400+ members. I watched people coming in from the local area, casting off addictions and sins, and then over the years, I watched them grow in God's agape-love for others, becoming selfless Christians caring for the community in love and service for others. This church was a Calvary Chapel, affiliated with Pastor Chuck Smith's Calvary Chapel in Costa Mesa, California. (see <http://www.unityinchrist.com/history/smith.htm> to see how this recent Christian revival started in the early 1970s, started by God through Pastor Chuck Smith. Pastor Chuck just died in 2014.) What I came to realize by direct contact, observation and experience, was that the Holy Spirit could exist and actually indwell some Sunday-observing Christians and groups. All Sabbath-keeping Church of God believers, from their doctrinal stance and understanding don't believe Sunday-keepers can have the indwelling Holy Spirit. That is something the Sabbath-keeping Churches of God down through history didn't always believe was possible. It's a sincerely held doctrinal view, and for the most part no animosity is held toward Sunday-keepers, they just believe they're sincerely deceived, they don't believe they're "real Christians." But by direct observation within a loving Calvary Chapel congregation in my hometown, I could see people I knew keeping 9 out of the 10 Commandments, not just in the letter, but in the spirit, as commanded by Jesus in Matthew 5:17-48 (something not really possible without God's Holy Spirit). I spent 7.5 years in this local Calvary Chapel.

From Calvary Chapel to the Messianic Jews

But having been spiritually “brought up” in a Sabbath-keeping Church of God, I didn’t feel totally comfortable with some of Calvary Chapel’s secondary doctrines, and especially not keeping the Sabbath and Holy Days of Leviticus 23 (which interestingly enough, Calvary Chapels understand the prophetic/symbolic meaning of, just as we had been taught in Worldwide---they even understand that Jesus will return the Church in the Millennial Kingdom of God on earth back to Sabbath and Holy Day observance. That was a pleasant surprise to me). I had been quietly keeping the Sabbath and Holy Days on my own, not working on those days throughout my stay in Calvary Chapel. But I sought a church that would keep those days. An old exWCG friend who attended the same Calvary Chapel with me told me about a wonderful tiny Messianic Jewish congregation that met about 8 miles west of my town. I was soon to learn that God had been very busy restoring the Jewish branch of the Body of Christ, via the Messianic Jewish movement, which had really started to pick up steam around 1970, the same time-period when the Calvary Chapels got started under Pastor Chuck Smith. Coincidence? The rabbis have a saying “With the things of God there is no such thing as coincidence.” (see <http://www.unityinchrist.com/prophets/Zephaniah/REVIVAL.html>.) So I started attending there for a couple years. They were a very wonderful, friendly and warm congregation. I learned enough from them and independent research to help me write the Messianic Jewish section of this website (see <http://www.unityinchrist.com/messianicmovement/messianicmovement.htm>). Their doctrinal understanding of the prophetic meaning of God’s Holy Days was quite similar to what Worldwide’s had been, but wasn’t a perfect match. I still wasn’t totally comfortable there.

Back To The Sabbath-keeping Churches of God

If you read that article about the Worldwide Church of God, you will see that after 1995 about 375 different, often squabbling, bickering Sabbath-keeping Churches of God denominations had formed, having split off the old Worldwide Church of God. A close exWCG friend of mine I'd known for about 40 years ran a Sabbath-keeping Church of God house-church which was loosely affiliated with Fred Coulter's Christian Biblical Church of God. I started attending to lend support to her family for reasons other than just wanting a place to attend on the Sabbath. I attended there for two years. I was sort of comfortable attending their tiny house-church, except that many in the group (as well as in Fred's denomination) held to the old Worldwide Church of God belief that "Sunday-keeping 'so-called' Christians couldn't possibly have the Holy Spirit indwelling them." At the same time I was challenged to go into some pretty heavy research as to whether the Sabbath command had actually been abrogated in the Bible (what Constantine did in 325AD doesn't count, only the Word of God counts to me). The article is in the WCG section of this site, more on that later. Because of my belief about Sunday-keepers having the ability (for whatever reason, I'm not totally sure) to have the indwelling Holy Spirit, I wasn't too comfortable within this house-church and they weren't that comfortable with me. After a couple years, though, their tiny house-church divided into two smaller house-churches, over some doctrinal differences. I went with the more independently-minded group, which was more accepting of the few members composing it, who all held somewhat differing beliefs (so we had to be accepting of minor doctrinal differences within the group). I discovered within this tiny group two others, a husband and wife, who essentially believed just as I do about Sunday-keepers having the ability to have the Holy Spirit, for whatever reason. After a couple more years, I followed this family into a local congregation of the United Church of God. Questions about unity in the Body of Christ, and especially within the terribly fractured Sabbath-keeping Church of God side of the Body of Christ have greatly concerned me of late, as I look for spiritual reasons why such disunity exists amongst people that essentially all believe the same things doctrinally. Articles on this theme will be coming up in the WCG section of the site from time to time, as unity is an issue close to my heart (it has been since the website started). As how to explain the major dichotomy between Sabbath and Sunday-keepers having the Holy Spirit, I have repeatedly sought God for answers, and sought to find them in his Word. I think I have come close to some of the answers, discussed in two articles I wrote. You can read them at these links: <http://www.unityinchrist.com/wwcofg/Has%20the%20Sabbat>

“Back to the dichotomy about Sabbath/Holyday observances verses Sunday observance. Both I and most Messianic Jewish believers believe the bottom line of the issue is this: If a Sunday-observing Christian should proved through their own Biblical studies about this issue that the Sabbath and Holy Days (of Leviticus 23) have not been abrogated, then that person is obligated to start observing them. But all Sunday-observing Christians who have not sufficiently looked into this issue have no such obligation to observe God’s Sabbath and Holy Days.”

Apart from a few other doctrinal differences, we have a lot in common (with the Calvary Chapels). I do believe they have a far better method of preaching sermons, going expositively through the Word of God, verse by verse, chapter by chapter, book by book. There is a lot we can learn from each other, that’s for sure, if we’d only humble ourselves enough to do so. So that is the explanation of my personal journey “From Sabbath to Sunday to Sabbath again.” I’m currently attending a wonderful Messianic Jewish congregation in my hometown (in North Central MA). This website is totally non-denominational, and I am as well.

How This Site Came To Be And What It’s For

The Lord has been inspiring me since 1995 to use some of my skills and talents in the area of editing, transcribing and writing on this website, which has been created for the express purpose of promoting spiritual growth and unity of purpose throughout the Body of Christ, and also to help promote personal, local church, and national and international evangelism (getting the Gospel to the world). The idea for this website came from a deep desire to help nourish those members within the Worldwide Church of God while it was still going through all those ‘doctrinal changes,’ which ended up destroying it as a Sabbath-keeping Church of God. I was attempting to nourish them with transcripts of excellent Calvary Chapel sermons which several Calvary Chapel pastors had graciously given me permission to transcribe. I was attempting to nourish them with the same high quality nourishment I had received (and still receive) from God's Word through these Calvary Chapels. Sadly, it didn't do any good, as far as I can see. I have a lot of talents, such as being able to absorb spiritual knowledge like a sponge for 25 years in WCG, being able to take a lot of tiny facts and put them into a big picture, things like that, but all with the inspirational aid of the Holy Spirit, I can't take credit for any of it. I could never have created this website without God's help and inspiration.

This website I believe has been designed by God, not me, to help foster and promote a degree of unity within the greater Body of Christ (see <http://www.unityinchrist.com/prophets/Zephaniah/Zephaniah1.htm> and scroll to the section on Zephaniah 2:1-3 and start reading from there). The crazy thing, and very painful too, is that in order for me to be somewhat qualified for the task, the Lord had to shift me in my spiritual journey through some of the major spiritually alive parts of the Body of Christ. This meandering spiritual journey, to meet those designs of the Lord, has been an extremely painful journey, which, often as not, guaranteed I'd be sort of a spiritual loner, not on purpose, but by the Lord's design. What has made this spiritual journey extremely painful, even now, is the fact that I don't really fit anywhere, doctrinally, within any denomination, because I've absorbed the true Biblical understandings each has had to offer, whilst rejecting what I have Biblically proven as error. So, doctrinally I'm a misfit, and left with the constant feeling that wherever I reside in the Body of Christ, I'm not totally comfortable. I have certain qualifications which have made me (by the Lord's design again, cf. Psalm 139) up for the task, this includes having an analytical mind, an acute interest in history, science, and the ability to take a bunch of facts and boil them down to their most common denominator. But if I had to choose this path again, or that of being an ordinary member of say a Calvary Chapel, happily married, fat, dumb and happy, I'd have gladly chosen the latter, instead of suffering through a broken family because they didn't understand my calling. The Body of Christ, in the spiritual opinion of quite a few qualified pastors, Messianic Jewish and Christian alike, is due for one last great Restoration and Revival. This website and ministries like it have been designed by God to help nourish believers, new and old alike within the Body of Christ, as it goes through that Restoration and Revival. Why? So that they can finish the job Jesus gave all of us to do before the Tribulation, World War III, comes upon the world (read Matthew 24:14-15). That link above also has an upper nav bar above it, with hypertext links going to a few other good articles about restoration and revival within the Body of Christ. Be sure to log onto them and read them if you're interested in doing the Lord's Work before he comes.
